This refers to information, written or spoken, which is sent from one person to another. It can be verbal and non-verbal.

3. Receiver:

The person who receives the message decodes it, understand it or attaches some meaning to it. Thus, the receiver has to perform three functions at receiving point. In other words he has to take the message. The second function of receiver is to attach meaning to it. The third one is to understand the message in same sense.

4. Medium:

The method with which communication is send is called channel. It can be letter, e-mail, fax, telegram, telegraph, telephone, reports, bulletin, posters and manuals. The sender has to select the appropriate channel, give the nature of message to be transmitted viz., oral or written.

5. Feed back:

Receiver's reaction or response to the message delivered is feedback. The feedback may be oral or verbal. Smiles, nod, sight etc., are oral ones while sending replies through letters, documents, submitting explanation etc., are written feedback.

The feed back in oral communication is quicker than the written communication. It minimizes or eliminate errors. Sometimes receiver may not give feedback to the message delivered. This leads to lot of wrong assumptions, erroneous conclusion and fallacious statement.
